

Liz Morrison is the Director of Networks and Communities in the Knowlton Center for Career Exploration at Denison University. As one of three senior leaders reporting directly to the Knowlton Center's Executive Director, Morrison works to establish Denison as a benchmark national liberal arts college for helping students prepare themselves for engaged personal, professional, intellectual, and civic lives. In her role as Director of Networks and Communities, Morrison leads the Knowlton Center's efforts in connecting with and supporting the generosity of Denison alumni, parents, and other friends of the University in their efforts to help students and recent graduates.

Prior to Denison, Morrison worked at Texas A&M University as the coordinator of the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences Development Council and as an Associate Director of the University of Chicago's Annual Giving team.

Morrison is a 2006 graduate from Denison and lives in Gahanna with her husband, daughter, and dog, Hayes, named after the famous Denison alum, Woody Hayes.
